A STORY OF TRANSFORMATION

There's only one constant in life — change. Some places eke out an inflexible identity, seeking a solid foundation or era to plant their feet firmly and dig their heels into. Others are more mutable, willing to cast off associations and judgments, eager and able to begin again and reinvent themselves, as adaptable as a light breeze and as flexible as swaying palms.

We're one of those places.

Five Park is the epicenter of transformation, ushering in a new decade and an era of unprecedented communal and personal change. Step into this new era and experience all that Miami Beach has to offer.

CONNECTING THE
SOUTH OF FIFTH COMMUNITY

MIAMI BEACH

RENOWNED ARTIST DANIEL BUREN CREATES A COLORFUL LANDMARK FOR MIAMI BEACH.

BUREN'S BRIDGE

From the shimmering bay to the copse of palm trees, the MacArthur Causeway has always been a picturesque entrance to South Beach. And, with an exciting new addition, it's set to be even more enchanting. When completed, the Miami Beach Canopy Bridge will be the beach's most prominent landmark, soaring forty feet over Fifth Street.

Designed by celebrated French conceptual artist Daniel Buren as part of the Five Park project, the 158-foot long enclosed tube will feature a patchwork of vibrant translucent panels filtering the light in a kaleidoscope of colors. "My work has to do with a place and where it's going to be seen," says Buren. "Whether it's a one-man show in a museum or a public work, my first basic approach to what I do is to connect to the space."

A prolific artist, Buren is known for creating sculptures and installations using contrasting colored stripes to affect a space. He is the brainchild behind some of the most recognizable public works of art spanning the globe, from the 260 black and white marble pillars at the Palais Royal in Paris to the whimsical sails of colored glass at the Louis Vuitton Foundation.
